STANLEY'S ELOQUENCE

Brought Tears to Many Eyes in the Winfree Case.

SMITH AT HIS BEST.

The Case Was Given to the Jury Yesterday at Noon.

The taking of testimony in the trial of Will Winfree was concluded Tuesday and two speeches were made. The defendant stated on the stand that he went to the L. & N. depot about 7 o'clock with his friend Jas. Yeaman, who was returning to Henderson and found the train late. Shortly afterwards he met Policeman Hord near the depot who accosted him roughly and told him he had enjoined upon him not to leave the depot and Hord arrested him and under his violent protest took him in the patrol wagon to the police station, where he paid a fine and was released. Subsequently he armed himself and about noon encountered Hord near the depot and intended to demand an apology of him and if necessary defend himself with a pistol. He said he approached Hord and took him to task for the treatment he had given him and that the officer grabbed him by the lapel of the coat and raised his billet and believing himself in danger, shot. He denied that he sought Hord for the purpose of killing him. He admitted that he was much intoxicated and could not remember distinctly what had occurred. Other witnesses were introduced to show that Hord's manner was threatening.

The prosecution's testimony was

FAIR COMPANY LOOKS A WINNER

Preliminary Meeting Held and Great Popular Interest Shown.

COMMITTEE NAMED.

Meeting for Organization
Will Be Held Next Monday Night.

The meeting called to consider the organization of a Christian County Fair Association was largely attended and much interest was shown in the movement.

The meeting was called to order by Mayor Meacham who stated the object of the meeting and briefly discussed the many advantages that would result from an annual reunion of the people for an old-time fair, where everybody could meet for pleasure and to compete for premiums in every department of the county's resources. The world's fair business has been overdone and the people are hungry for a return to the home fairs, where social features are uppermost in mind.

The meeting was organized by the election of Douglas Bell, chairman, and Dr. M. W. Williams, secretary.

The plans of the grounds upon which an option is held were laid before the meeting, with the report of the engineer, who had made a preliminary survey, and a number of speeches were made advocating the immediate formation of a company to hold a fair this fall. Among those who spoke were M. C. Forbes, J. E. Moseley, M. J. Davis, and others.

A motion providing for the organization of a $20,000 company was adopted and the chair was authorized to appoint a committee to solicit stock, with members in every magisterial district, and report at another meeting next Monday night.

The shares are to be $25 each and the money is to be used to buy 25 or 26 acres of woodland at $100 an acre and erect a grandstand, floral hall, stables and fencing, and grade the track for the speed rings. In the clearing of the grove enough posts can be obtained for fences and some lumber will be secured in thinning out the trees. It is proposed to put a dam across a little valley in the cleared field south of the grove and make a lake of five or six acres, which can be done at small expense. The entrance to Main street can be bought at $150 an acre, and the one to Virginia for less, and Capt. Davis announced that he would exchange this roadway for stock in the association.

It is hoped to have the company organized and ready for business by July 1.

The Cookbook.

Melted butter is a very good substitute for olive oil in salad dressing. May prefer the butter to oil.

Turnips boiled in their jackets like beets are much better than when pared. Adding a little sugar to the water will correct any bitterness.

Fish that is to be fried should be ordered to be sent early, as it cooks much better if previously rolled some time in a clean cloth to insure perfect dryness.

Scoop out as many large lemons as there are guests, sculp the edges and fill the cups with French peas mixed with a stiff mayonnaise. Arrange the lemons on crisp lettuce leaves and serve with cheese and crackers.

A woman who is past master in sandwich making prefers fried ham to boiled for sandwiches. She cooks the ham slowly in the frying pan, giving it just enough browning to improve the flavor. Then she reduces it by grinding to a veritable powder and mixes it with mayonnaise.

The Housekeeper's Problem.

THE FACTS OF THE CASE

THE tendency of the times is for young women to prefer work in office or factory rather than doing housework. Yet the work in the office or factory is usually more nerve-racking because it is a constant repetition of work at high speed—a tension which racks brain and body and from which there is no relaxation. On the other hand the housekeeper, if she be a mother of a large family, is weighted down with worries and cares—her housework is beyond her strength, perhaps, yet if she studies her work, puts her housework on a business basis and manages well, she can easily take twenty minutes or half an hour in the middle of the day to completely relax. For complete relaxation, says Dr. R. V. Pierce, "the tired woman should lie on her back without pillow or bolster; let every muscle be passive (loose, unlimbered). Put a damp cloth over the eyes to rest them. Think of nothing or as near nothing as you can. If the brain is still occupied with plans or worries, count several hundred, or recite so much that their strength leaves; or rhymes or verses."

Our American women have a worldwide reputation for beauty, but, at the same time, there are women in the cities and country who possess neither beauty of face nor form, because in these instances they suffer from nervousness, the result of disorders of the womanly organism. At regular intervals they suffer so much that their strength leaves them; they are so prostrated that it takes days for them to recover their strength. Of course such periodic distress has its bad effect on the nervous system, says Dr. Pierce in his Common Sense Medical Advice. "The withered and drawn faces, the dark circles and grown font over the eyes, the straight figure without lines curves which lend so much to feminine beauty are the unmistakable signs of womanly disorders. The young girl should study how to make herself more attractive; how to down those badly laid that pull her down. A sick woman cannot be a beautiful woman, nor can she be anything but a failure."

CONFIDE IN A MAN

When a woman has ill and pains she cannot stand—when she is so weak that every woman, she should confide her troubles to a physician of standing in the community, or one who has a national reputation. Certainly it would not be the part of wisdom to listen to an ignorant person without medical education simply because she was a woman. There is every reason why she should write to a specialist, particularly to one who has made the diseases of women a specialty for a third of a century, like Dr. R. V. Pierce, founder of the Lyell's Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y.

All his correspondence is held sacredly confidential, and he gives his advice free and without charge. "I must tell you what a wonderful medicine your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Fruit of Life' have done for me."

Mrs. Nora Anderson, of Vandergrift, Westmoreland Co., Pa., writes: "These remedies have done wonders for me. I was thoroughly run-down and worked-out a woman as ever lived and, in fact, contemplated suicide at different times. It would be impossible for me to describe my sufferings so you could understand all. I had such bearing-down pains; felt almost as though approaching confinement. Would blast across abdomen and it seemed as though a heavy pressure was there. I suffered untold agony; had severe pains through hips almost as severe as labor pains. Head would ache till it seemed it would burst. Face would be dark, swollen, and my stomach would bloat dreadfully. Soreness in womb was so severe that if I stopped on my feet would almost scream with pain. Bladder seemed to be full all the time. Our doctor said that I had inflammation of womb and kidneys. He gave me some tablets to kill the pain. Oh! how I did suffer. I can never tell you all. I sent for a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and one of his 'Favorite Prescriptions,' also some of his 'Pleasant Pellets,' and took them regularly according to directions. Now I am on my second bottle of each and feel a great deal better than for five years previous to trying these medicines. If I can only find money to continue I will become hearty and strong. I have tried other natural medicines but none ever did me any good. I am indeed thankful to God for putting it in my mind to try Doctor Pierce's medicines."

"I will gladly answer any lady who may wish to inquire as to the truth of my statement. May God's richest blessings be with you and yours."

HOW TO KEEP YOUTH AND BEAUTY. Every woman, young or old, should know herself. To arrive at this knowledge, secure a genuine doctor, by addressing Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. The People's Common Sense Medical Advice can be procured by sending twenty-one cents in one-cent stamps or paper-bound volume or forty-one stamps for a cloth-bound copy.

Uncommon.

night. A sudden drop in June is not uncommon, however, as the fol-

A GENERAL SHAKE-UP

New Heads For Departments at State Charitable Institutions.

DEMOCRATS LOSE OUT.

Dr. Ferguson Only Democrat
Who Holds on In Western Asylum.

Frankfort, Ky., June 16.—Heads of the departments at the state charitable institutions were appointed today by the State Board of Control, but the appointments do not become effective until July. Several changes will be made. At Hopkinsville Dr. Thomas W. Gardner, of Madisonville, a Republican, is appointed to succeed Dr. J. W. Stephens, of Elkton, and S. A. Pate, of Hardinsburg, is appointed steward to succeed R. E. Berry, of Owensboro. No changes are made at Lakeland, all the heads of the departments being reappointed. No changes were made at the Feeble-minded Institute here.

Three men lose out by reason of the board abolishing the office of treasurer of the asylum, and deciding to have a bank in each town where the asylum is located act as treasurer. The following are the appointments as made to-day and given out by the Board of Control.

HOPKINSVILLE ASYLUM.

Superintendent, Dr. Thos. W. Gardner, of Madisonville to succeed Dr.
J. W. Stephens, of Elkton, Gardner is a Republican and Stephens a Democrat.

Stewart, S. A. Pate, of Hardins-burg, to succeed R. E. Berry, of Owensboro. Berry has been steward for five years.
The first assistant, Dr. Joe M.
Ferguson, of Central City, remains in his position, and the board did not appoint any person as third assistant to succeed Dr. Minnie Dunlap, who resigned to go to London, Canada, on account of the illness of her daughter.

LAKELAND ASYLUM.

Superintendent, Dr. L. H. Mulligan, renomiated. Dr. Mulligan was elected superintendent to succeed Dr. M. H. Yeaman, who resigned two years ago.

Steward, J. A. Fuqua, of Owensboro, reappointed. Mr. Fuqua is the father-in-law of Gov. Beckham.

First assistant, Dr. W. E. Gardner, of Elizabethtown; second assistant, Dr. John H. Wood, of Bowling Green, and Dr. Louise B. Trigg, of Glasgow, all reappointed.

Feeble-Minded Institute.

No action was taken, and the superintendent, Dr. A. Bailey, of Frankfort, and the steward, John E.
Evans, of Morehead, remain in office.

LEXINGTON ASYLUM.

Superintendent, Dr. R. C. Willis, of Lexington, succeeds Dr. J. S.
Redwine, who has served for eight years. Steward, J. H. Reed, reappointed. First assistant, Dr. C. A.
Nevitt, of Meade county; second assistant, Dr. W. E. Bender, of Brownsville, and third assistant, Dr.
Florence Mader, remain, as there were no appointments in their places.

The superintendents of the asylums appoint all of their subordinates. The board passed a rule doing away with the treasurer's office, and the banks in the cities where the institutions are located will act as treasurers of them. Those losing out are Lucian H. Davis, of Hop-

MARSHALL COUNTY

Night Rider Cases Are Now
On Trial.

Benton, Ky., June 15.—In the Circuit Court here this morning the case of the Commonwealth of Kentucky vs. Dr. Champion, Tom Mc-Cain, Burnett Phelps, Wick Tarry,
Louis Chaudet, Alfred Chaudet,
Wallace and Amos Stringer, Fred Holden and Will McAtee was called for trial. Demurrers to the indictments were overruled and the Commonwealth's Attorney announced ready for trial. The defendants demanded separate trials. The Commonwealth elected to try Burnett Phelps. The accused are charged with night riding in the Birmingham raid, in which two negroes were killed and several whipped last March.

Otis Black, the star witness, confessed that he was in the raid, which was organized in Tom McCain's flourmill. He named 68 men besides himself who took part in the raid, indicting the man on trial and the 16 others indicted.

DEATH WAS SUDDEN.

Well Known Citizen Victim of Heart Trouble.

Mr. John Coombs, a well known citizen, died suddenly Tuesday morning at his home on South Virginia street. He had not been in good health for some time, but the immediate cause of death was heart failure. Mr. Coombs was 77 years old and a native of England, but came to America many years ago, and had resided in Hopkinsville for twenty-five years. He was a civil war veteran, having served in the Federal army. He is survived by his widow and three children—one son and two daughters—Mrs. Thomas Rosch, of Sebree, who arrived here Tuesday evening, and Miss Della Coombs, of this city.

The deceased was a member of the Ninth Street Presbyterian church.
Rev. C. H. H. Branch conducted the funeral services yesterday afternoon at the residence and the interment took place in Riverside cemetery.

New School Law.

The new School District law went into effect June 15, 1908. Within 30 days after that date the county judge, the county attorney and county superintendent of schools must meet at the court house and divide the county into four, six or eight divisions. Every school in the county except graded schools will be placed in one of these educational divisions and be controlled by a division board. These boards will elect the teachers in time for the schools to begin early in September.

Miss Jennie West has suffered a relapse and is again critically ill.

ANY remedy that benefits digestion strengthens the nerves. The nerve centers require nutrition. If the digestion is impaired, the nerve centers become atonic, and indigestion is the result.

Per-na is not a nerve tonic, but a stimulant. It benefits the nerves by benefiting digestion.

Per-na frees the stomach of catarrhal congestions and normal digestion is the result.

In other words, Per-na goes to the bottom of the whole difficulty, when the disagreeable symptoms disappear. Mrs. J. C. Jamison, 61 Marchant street, Watonsville, Cal., writes:

"I was troubled with my stomach for six years. I tried many kinds of medicine, also was treated by three doctors. They said that I had nervous dyspepsia. I was put on a liquid diet for three months.

Mrs. Clayton B. ailes Hurd, of Houston, Texas, is here on a visit to her mother.

"I improved under the treatment, but as soon as I stopped taking the medicine, I got bad again.

"I took the medicine for two years, then I got sick again and gave up all hopes of getting cured.

"I saw a testimonial of a man whose case was similar to mine being cured by Per-na, so I thought I would give it a trial.

"I procured a bottle at once and commenced taking it. I have taken several bottles and am entirely cured.

"I have gained in strength and feel like a different person. I believe Per-na is all that is claimed for it."

Nervines, such as coal tar preparations, are doing a great deal of harm. Sleep medicines and headache powders are all alike—heart depressants, and should not be used. The nerves would be all right, if the digestion were good. Per-na corrects the digestion.

Mrs. Geo. E. Gary and daughter Miss Addie Bell are visiting in Louisville.

entirely at variance with this version. A witness named Peebles told of hearing Winfree make a threat to kill Hord in a saloon after the arrest. Several witnesses said Hord was fired upon unexpectedly and that three shots were fired, one striking the officer from behind, entering under his shoulder blade.

The evidence throughout was conflicting, but the defendant admitted the most damaging fact that he had armed himself and attacked the officer, because Hord had arrested him for appearing upon the street, after he had warned him not to leave the depot in the intoxicated condition he was in.

C. H. Bush for the defense and J. Walter Knight for the State spoke Tuesday afternoon and yesterday morning the argument was closed by Congressman A. O. Stanley for the defense and Commonwealth's Attorney Denny P. Smith for the prosecution.

The speech of Mr. Stanley was a powerful and eloquent appeal and was listened to by a great crowd, including more than sixty ladies. His closing appeal to the jury moved many to tears.

Mr. Smith's speech was by long odds the best speech he has ever made here in any case. His plea for the enforcement of the law in spite of the prominence of the defendant's family, was as strong as it could be made. He gave the case to the jury at noon.

Will Johnson and Charles Tyler, both colored, charged with house-breaking, entered a plea of guilty and were given two years each in the penitentiary.

Attacks Gov. Willson.

In a speech at Franklin, Commonwealth's Attorney R. Y. Thomas charged that Gov. Willson had rendered himself liable to indictment for sending soldiers into counties without the request of civil authorities.

CUMMINS FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Latest Tip From Republican Convention at Chicago.

EASY SAILING FOR TAFT

Nominations May Be Expected For To-day—Contests Settled.

Chicago, June 17.—The Republican National Convention was called to order in Chicago at noon yesterday and Temporary Chairman Burrows delivered his keynote address. Aside from the demonstrations when President Roosevelt's name was mentioned there were few evidences of enthusiasm. An effort by the Ohio delegation to start a demonstration for Secretary Taft evoked only a few scattering yells from outside delegations and spectators. After the presentation of names for the various committees the convention adjourned to meet again today at noon.

The Committees on Credentials and Resolutions held animated sessions last night, the former passing on contests and the latter hearing arguments over various planks of the platform.

Steam-roller methods continued to prevail when the contests were taken up by the Committee on Credentials. The Kentucky contests, after two hours of argument, were quickly settled in favor of the Taft delegates. The vote on the First district contest was 41 to 4 in favor of the Taft men, and this was a fair index to the results generally.

The question of a nominee for the vice-presidency is still up in the air. The only pronounced feature of yesterday's conference was an apparent strengthening of the boom for Gov. Cummins, of Iowa. This was due to meetings of the Iowa delegation in the interest of harmony, and these meetings are said to have developed the fact that only three men on the delegation were opposed to the plan to name an Iowan as the candidate for second place.

By Fire of a Mysterious Origin.

The residence of M. C. Dulin, who resides a few miles east of the city, was totally destroyed by fire of unknown origin last Saturday. Mr. Dulin was cutting wheat and his family was in the city. When Mr. Dulin discovered the flames he ran to the building, but succeeded in saving only a few articles of furniture. There had been no fire in the house for two days. The loss is probably $2,500, with no insurance.

Sophy of Kravonia.

By ANTHONY HOPE.
Author of "The Prisoner of Zenda."
Copyright, 1908, Anthony Hope Hawkins.

In vain will the readers of this tale of romantic love and brilliant daring search the maps of the world for the picturesque land of Kravonia, wherein lovely, fascinating Sophy and her mysterious Red Star played their parts. This much we may tell him before he embarks on his voyage to Kravonia. But we may assure him that when he reluctantly parts with Sophy, some-time scullery maid of Morpington, Essex, England, later scullery maid of the medium of Paris, France, and still later of high rank in Slavia and Volseni, in Kravonia, the country of her adoption will be to him, like Zenda and Graustark, more real than are many of the smaller, actual kingdoms of the earth. Sad and tragic in some of its aspects is the love story of Sophy of Kravonia, but its pathos is so lightened by devoted loyalty, hardy bravery and tender, self-sacrificing affection that at the end the reader will surely feel its telling has not been unworthy of the master hand of its famous chronicler.

Captain Markart thought he would smoke his cigar in the little room, lying on the bed. He was tired and sleepy—very sleepy. There was no denying it. Lepage sat down and ate and drank. He found no fault with the wine in the bottle. Then he went out and looked at Markart. The captain lay in his shirt, breeches and boots. He was sound asleep and breathing heavily. His cigar had fallen on the sheet, but apparently had been out before it fell. Lepage regarded him with pained lips, shrugged his shoulders and slipped the captain's revolver into his pocket. The captain's recovery must be left to fate. For the next hour he worked at the gear of sheets, slicing, twisting and splitting. In the end he found himself possessed of a fairly stout rope twelve or thirteen feet long, but he could find nothing solid to tie it to near the window except the bed, and that was a yearn away. He would still have a fall of twenty feet, and the ground was hard with a spring frost. There would be need of the mattress. He put out all the lights in the room and cautiously raised the window.

"The night was dark. He could not see the ground. He stood there two minutes. Then he heard a measured tramp. A dark figure, just distinguishable, came around the corner of the palace, walked past the window to the end of the building, turned, walked back and disappeared. Hurriedly Lepage struck a match and took the time again he waited; again the figure came. Again he struck a light and took the time. He went through this process five times before he felt reasonably sure that he could rely on having ten minutes to himself if he started the moment Sterkoff's sentry had gone around the corner of the building.

He pulled the mattress up on to the sill of the window and waited. There was no sound now but at Markart's stertorous breathing, but presently the measured tramp came, passed, turned and passed away. Lepage gave a last tug at the footings of his knees, took a long scope, threw the end at the window, took the mattress and dropped it very carefully as straight down as he could.

"I wish I knew the best way to do it," thought Lepage, as he pulled the mattress up on to the sill of the window and waited. There was no sound now but at Markart's stertorous breathing, but presently the measured tramp came, passed, turned and passed away. Lepage gave a last tug at the footings of his knees, took a long scope, threw the end at the window, took the mattress and dropped it very carefully as straight down as he could.

The next moment, in spite of Sterkoff, somebody had left the palace. Why not? The runaway was aware that the king was not really suffering from influenza. He could spend an evening at Slavia without regret.

"I wish I knew the safest way to do it," thought Lepage, dangling at the end of his rope. It swayed about terribly. He waited awhile for it to steady itself—he feared to miss the mattress—but he could not wait long as that measured tramp and that dark figure would come. There would be a sudden spurt of light and a report—and what of Lepage then? He gathered his legs up behind his knees, took a long breath—and fell. As luck would have it, though he landed on the very edge of the mattress, yet he did land on it and tumbled forward on his face, shaken, but with bones intact. There was a numb feeling about his knees—nothing worse than that.

He drew another long breath. Heavy bodies and even mattresses fall quickly. He must have seven or eight minutes yet!

But no! Heavy bodies, even mattresses, falling quickly, make a noise. Lepage, too, had come down with a thud, squashing hidden air out of the interstices of the mattress. The silence of night will give resonance to gentler sounds than that, which was as though a giant had squeezed his mighty sponge. Lepage on his stomach knew listened. The steps came, not measured now, but running. The dark figure came running around the corner. What next? Next the challenge—then the spurt of light and the report! What of Lepage then? Nothing so far as Lepage and the rest of humanity for certainly knew of that nothing, actual or possible. Lepage did not approve. He hit the mattress on to his back, bent himself nearly double and, thus both burdened and protected, made for the river. He must have looked like a turtle scurrying to the sea lest he should be turned over and so left for soup in due season.

"Who goes there? Halt! Halt!" The turtle scurried on. It was no moment to stop and discuss matters. The spurt of light—the report! There was a hole in the mattress, but well above Lepage's head. Indeed, if hit at all, he was not most likely to be hit in the head. That vital portion of him was tucked away too carefully. He presented a broader aim, but the mattress masked him nobly. There was another shot—the northwest corner of the mattress this time—but the mattress on the river's edge. The next instant it was floating on the current of the Krath, and Sterkoff's sentry was indulging in some very pretty practice at it. He hit it every time until the swift current carried it around the bend and out of sight.

The whole thing seemed strange and rather uneasy to the sentry. He grounded his rifle and wiped his brow. It had looked like a carpet taken a walk on its own account and then a swing. Superior officers might be accustomed to such strange phenomena. The sentry was not. He set off at a round pace to the guardroom. He did not even stay to notice the white rope which dangled in the air from a first floor window. Had he stopped he would have heard Markart's invincible, drug-laden snoring.

Lepage bled himself from his good friend and ally, the mattress, and dived under water while the sentry blazed away. He welcomed the current which bore him rapidly from the dangerous neighborhood of the palace. He came to the surface fifty feet down stream and made for the other side.

"The king died at five o'clock, M. Zerkovich," he said.

He made land a quarter of a mile before the palace. As it was colder on the road there than struggling with the cold water! But his spirit was not quenched. He laughed again, a trifle hysterically perhaps. In spite of Sterkoff he was spending the evening out! He set his feet for Slavia—briskly, too! Nay, he was, for warmth's sake and because of what the sentry might even now be reporting to Sterkoff and through him, to General Stenches. The thought brought him to a standstill again. There might be a cord of sentries across the road! After a moment's hesitation he broke away from the main road, struck due south and so ran when he could, walked when he must. Two miles.

He was getting terribly tired now, but not cold—rather he was feverishly hot inside his clammy garments. He turned along a country cross road which ran west and passed through a village, leaving the Hotel de Paris on the main road far to his right. At last he reached the main road south and turned up it, heading again for Slavia and for the bridge which crossed the South river. He passed the bridge without being challenged as the cathedral clock struck midnight from St. Michael's square. The worst of his task was accomplished. If now he could find Zerkovich!

But he was sure spent. Running was out of the question now. He slunk slowly and painfully along the south boulevard, clinging close to the fences of the gardens, seeking the shelter of the trees which overhung them.

Dragged, battered, dirty, infinitely weary, at last he reached Zerkovich's house at the corner where the boulevard and the Street of the Fountain meet. He opened the garden gate and walked in. Spent as he was, he breathed a " Bravo!" when he saw a light burning in the hall. He staggered on, rang the bell and fairly fell in a lump outside the door.

He had done well. He, a man of peace, busy with clothes—he had done well that night! But he was finished. When Zerkovich opened the door he found little more than a heap of dank and dirty rags. He should it in and shut the door. He supported Lepage into the study, set him by the fire and got handy for him to drink, pouring out full his muddled Lepage took it and drank the better part of it at a gulp.

"The king died at five o'clock, M. Zerkovich," he said. He drank the rest, let the tumbler fall, with a crash, in the fender, buried his head on his breast and fell into blank unconsciousness.

He was out of the castle as much as Mark, who stood like a statue around in spite of Stenovic's shakings and Dr. Netchev's rubbings and stimulants. But he had done his part. It was for Zerkovich to do his now.

The king had died at 5 o'clock? It was certainly odd, that story, because Zerkovich had just returned from the office of the Russian minister and before he left he had sent down to the foreman printer an official communiqué to be inserted in his paper. It was to the effect that Czarist Russia had a great honor of fifty men would leave Slavia next morning at 7 o'clock for Moscow to be in readiness to receive the king, who had to travel at great speed and was about to proceed to his country seat to complete his convalescence.

Captain Miltich and a quart of honor for Dobrava! Zerkovich decided that he would if possible ride ahead of them to Dobrava—that is, part of the way. But first he called his old housekeeper and told her to put Lepage to bed.

"Don't worry about anything he says. He's really," he added thoughtfully. But poor Lepage raved no more that night. He did not speak again till all was over. He had done his part.

At 6 o'clock in the morning Zerkovich left Slavia hidden in a carriage and a horse at a high price from a farmer three miles along the road and thence out for the castle at his best speed. At 6 Captain Miltich, charged with Stenovic's careful instructions, set out with his guard of honor along the same road—going to Dobrava to await the arrival of the king, who lay dead in the palace on the Krath!

But since they started at 6 and not 7, as the official communiqué had said, Zerkovich to suppose, he had an hour less to spare than he thought. Moreover, they went not fifty strong, but a hundred.

These two changes of the hour and the force—were made as soon as Stenovic and Stalfitz learned of Lepage's escape. A large force and a midnight march would have aroused suspicion in Slavia. The general did what he could safely do to meet the danger of the escape and to save the king that news of the king's death might be carried to Prasiok before Miltich and his escort got there.

Chapter Twenty-six

AFTER his happy holiday the prince slept well and rose in a cheerful mood, still joyful of heart. He anticipated that the day would bring him the news of the king's death. He had little doubt that in the course of a personal interview he could persuade the king to agree to a postponement of his coronation. Or, if necessary, to say nothing—by reservation necessary and not inexcusable. It was impossible not to take into account the knowledge he had acquired of the state of the king's health. The result of that condition was that his provision must in all likelihood be for months and not for years. The task for the month was to avoid disturbing the king's mind so long as this course was consistent with the maintenance of his own favorable position. It must be remembered that no man in the kingdom built more on this latter object than the king himself. No man less a partisan of Countess Ellenberg and of young Alexia than the husband of the king and the father of the other. The royal line—the line which boasted Bourbon blood—was for the king the only line of his dynasty. Of the attack prepared against him the prince knew nothing—not even of the king's mind having been turned against the Baroness Dolza, whom so short a time ago he had believed to honor; nothing, of course, of Stenovic's audacious coup nor of the secret plan which Stenovic and Miltich were to be the instrument. Of all the salient features of the situation, then, he was ignorant, and his ignorance was not a small thing. On the other hand, Stenovic had his finger on every thread save one—the Lepage-Zerkovich thread, if it may so be called. That was important, but its importance might be nullified if Miltich made good speed.

On the whole, the odds were much in favor of the coteries. If by any means they could prevent the king from coming alive and free to Slavia the game would be theirs. If he did come alive and free, their game would probably be lost. His presence would mean a hard fight or a surrender, and Slavia had no stomach for such a fight, though it would be plucked for the sake of Bergia, whether as prince or king, without the necessity of an ordeal severe.

As a preliminary to the summons he anticipated, and to a possible fight, he had some talks with his father at Slavia, the police had details to discuss and routine business to transact with Lukovich, the captain of his battery in Voland. He was early on horseback. Sophy and Max von Holbrandt (Max's stay at the castle was to end the next day) rode with him as far as the gates of the city. There they left him and turned down into the plain to enjoy a canter on the banks of Lake Talt. The three were to meet again for the day meal at Prasiok. Marie Zerkovich had been ailing and kept her bed in the morning. The prince's mounted guard rode behind him and his friends rode to the Volenski for the sake of exercising their horses. In the castle there were left only Marie Zerkovich and the servants. The prince did not anticipate that any message would come from the palace before noon at the earliest.

Morning avocations pursued their usual peaceful and simple course at the castle. Old Vassip, his wife and the valets did their cleaning. Peter Vassip saw to his master's clothes, and his father, after breakfast, began to stoke the wooden causeway. The stables groomed their horses. They had been warned that the prince might want another mount later in the day. Marie Zerkovich lay in her bed, sleeping soundly after a restless night. There seemed no sign of trouble in the air. It must be confessed that up to now it looked as though Prasiok would be caught napping.

It was Peter Vassip, busy on the causeway, who first saw Zerkovich.

"I must see the prince," he cried, "and immediately!"

He rested and leaned on his mop to watch the head which rose over the hill, the body which followed, the farm horse lumbering along in a slow, clumsy, unwilling gallop. The man was using stick and spur. He was riding merrily. Peter ran down to the road and waited. A groom came across from the stables and joined him.

"He's got no call to treat the horse like that, whoever he is," the groom observed. "A large force and a midnight march would have aroused suspicion in Slavia. The general did what he could safely do to meet the danger of the escape and to save the king that news of the king's death might be carried to Prasiok before Miltich and his escort got there."

"Not unless he's on urgent business," said Peter, twirling the water from his mop.

Zerkovich was up to them. He leaped from his horse. "I must see the prince," he cried, "and immediately!"

"The prince is at Volenski, sir. He rode over to see Captain Miltich."

"When will he be back?"

"We don't expect him till 12 o'clock." Zerkovich snatched out his watch.

"There's nobody here but Mrs. Zerkovich, sir. She's still in bed, not very well, sir."

"Twelve o'clock," muttered Zerkovich, paying no heed to the news about his wife.

"The baroness and Baron von Holbrandt are out riding?"

"No, you give me a fresh horse for me. I must ride on to see the prince at Volenski."

"Oh, yes, sir." He signed to the groom. "Take your horse and be added."

"The guard's here of course?"

"No, sir; they've gone with the prince."

Zerkovich twisted his head irritably and again looked at his watch. "There must be time," he said. "They can't be here at noon for an hour and a half."

Peter Vassip did not understand him, but neither did he venture to ask questions.

"Your horse!" he be here in a minute, sir. I think you'll find the prince in his office over the city gate. He went to do business, not to drink, his morning."

Zerkovich looked at his watch and moment, wondering perhaps whether he would be wise to tell his news. But what was the use of telling Peter Vassip? Or his own wife? What could he do? It was for the prince to say who should be told. The one thing was to find the prince. There was time—at the very least an hour and a half.

The groom brought the fresh horse, and Zerkovich began to mount.

"A glass of wine, sir?" Peter Vassip suggested. He had marked Zerkovich's pale face and strained air. He had wondered to see his clothes sprinkled with white powder traces, sprays of the sack under whose cover he had hid out of Slavia.

Zerkovich was in the saddle. "No," he answered, "but a bumper. Peter, when I've found the prince! He set your horse to his home and was off at a gallop for Volenski. The road, though high on the hills, was nearly level now."

Peter scratched his head as he looked after him for a moment. Then he returned to his mop.

He was just finishing his task, some twenty minutes later, when he heard Sophy's laugh. She and Holbrandt came from a lane which led up from the lake and joined the main road at a hundred yards along toward Volenski.

Peter ran and took their horses, and they mounted the causeway in leisurely, pleasant chat. Sophy was in her sheepskin uniform. Her cheeks were pale, but the stars glowed. "The world seemed good to her that morning."

"And that is roughly the story of my life," she said, with a laugh, as she reached the top of the causeway and leaned against the rude balustrade which ran up the side of it.

"A very interesting one, even very remarkable," he said, returning. "But much more remains to be written. I don't doubt, baroness."

"Something perhaps," said Sophy.

"A good deal, I imagine," she said. She shot a mischievous glance at him. She knew that he was trying to lure from her an avowal of her secret. "Who can tell? It all seems like a dream sometimes, and dreams are in sudden awakenings, you know."

"It is a dream, you make an excellent dream lady, baroness."

Peter Vassip put his mop and pad down by the stables and came up and stood beside them.

"Did the mare carry you well today, sir?" he asked Max.

"Admirably, Peter. We had a splendid ride—at least I thought so. I hope the baroness and simple course at the castle. Old Vassip, his wife and the valets did their cleaning. INSPECTION TUESDAY NIGHT

Company D Passes Through Official Scrutiny With Credit.

MAJ. FROST PRESENT.

Col. Henry and Maj. Bassett Were on Hand With Their Staffs.

The official inspection of Co. D was held Tuesday night by Maj. Alfred S. Frost, retired, of the U. S. army.

Col. Jouett Henry and staff were present, his staff officers consisting of Capt. Homer Blane, of Cadiz, assistant surgeon; Capt. B. G. Nelson, quartermaster, and Capt. A. G. Chapman, commissary.

Also Maj. E. B. Bassett and Adjutant Ben S. Winfree.

Lieut. Stanley Bassett and 41 soldiers were inspected and the inspection was very satisfactory. The men have profited greatly by their active service and they showed unusual proficiency in their drilling and the condition of the company was highly satisfactory. The inspection was a good one in every way.

Maj. Frost left yesterday for Owensboro.

MEDICAL MEN

Held Interesting Meeting at Fleming's Cave.

The Christian County Medical Society held their regular monthly meeting at Fleming's Cave Wednesday. By special invitation a number of physicians of Todd and Hopkins counties were in attendance. A big barbecued dinner was a feature and was greatly enjoyed by the large crowd of M. D.'s.

LINDSAY'S FIRM TO FIGHT LAW

Will Attempt to Break Up the Anti-Betting Act of New York.

Three Points to Be Considered in the Case, and Plans For the Suits.

New York, June 16.—Three test cases of the new anti-betting law will be prepared to-day at the instance of friends of racing, who have retained the law firms of Davies, Stone & Auerbach and Nicoll, Anable, Lindsay & Fuller. Three well-known layers of odds will be charged with violating Section 351 of the amended penal code, and writs of habeas corpus, also writs of certiorari, will be sued out to carry the cases before a Supreme Court Justice immediately. It is understood that the application for the writs will be made to Judge Cuyler. It is understood that these test cases will be made with the approval of Assistant District Attorney Robert H. Elder, of Kings county. There will be, it is said, three points raised—first, whether it is legal to post odds; second, what constitutes a wager in the eyes of the law and to what extent individual betting without the recording of wagers can be carried on, and third, a general construction of the law.

HORSE RAN OFF

And Farmer Was Painfully Injured.

As Mr. Fred Elgin was driving on East Seventh street yesterday his horse became frightened at a bicycle and ran off. Mr. Elgin was thrown out of the vehicle near Main and painfully, but not seriously injured. The vehicle was considerably torn up.

MANY WARRANTS

Will Be Sworn Out Against the Cumberland Telephone Company.

Attorney, of Marshall, Alleges Wires and Poles Erected Without Authority.

Paducah, Ky., June 16.—For trespassing upon the highways of Marshall county the County Attorney, W. M. Reeder, is preparing to swear out 1,460 warrants against the Cumberland Telephone Company. The cases will either be tried in Magistrates' courts or before the County Judge.

The County Attorney claims that the Cumberland Telephone Company erected poles through the county and strung wires without any authority from the Marshall county officials. The statute provides that every day a pole stands on a public highway contrary to law constitutes a separate offense. The penalty is $10 in each case, and there is no appeal. The County Attorney cannot go back further than one year. Besides the fine the company will have to pay the costs if the cases go against it, which would run the total up to over $20,000. The warrants will be for poles on four roads, but the County Attorney did not care to take in the whole county this time.

In the Circuit Court County Attorney Reeder regained possession of a strip of land the Cumberland Telephone Company had confiscated and placed poles on. When the company requested permission to erect poles on the land the County Attorney agreed if the company would furnish him a telephone at $1 per month. It refused to do so, and when Attorney Reeder was away from home the company put up the poles. He may chop down the poles.

The Cumberland Telephone Company is said to be a Kentucky corporation and cannot carry the cases into the United States Court.

Dog Law Not Repealed

In answer to the many inquiries we will state that the dog law was neither repealed nor amended by the last legislature. The law is before the Court of Appeals in a test case, and it is thought that tribunal will declare it constitutional. Owners of sheep killed or injured by dogs should file their claims for damages as the law directs.—Hustler.
